William M. Diesslin Re-Elected to the IHMM Board of Directors

[Rockville, MD, February 5, 2021] The Institute of Hazardous Materials Management is pleased to announce that William M. Diesslin, Associate Director of Environmental Health and Safety at Iowa State University, has been re-elected to the Institute's Board of Directors. Bill also serves as the Institute's Vice-Chair.

"The Institute and its more than 9000 credentialed professionals around the country and the world deeply appreciate the outstanding volunteer contributions of Bill Diesslin. Bill is an inspirational leader encouraging the highest standards of professional conduct among environmental professionals," said Gene Guilford, IHMM's Executive Director.

Guilford added, "In the coming years, the Institute has challenging work to do, creating new opportunities for growth in the service of our certificants and continuously strengthening the development of professionals in the hazardous materials management, dangerous goods transportation, environmental protection, health & safety communities of practice. It is good to know that Bill is going to be a part of an exciting future at the Institute."

IHMM also expresses its appreciation to the ISU community for allowing Bill to participate in IHMM's activities.
